Know thy neighbor?

Neighborly relations have declined in the U.S. since the 1950s, for reasons sociologists don't quite know. Lack of local ties is bad for crime and a community's ability to organize for their interests, to say nothing of leaving you stranded when you need one more egg.

Some 28 percent of Americans know none of our neighbors' names, reports a 2010 Pew survey. "The biggest barrier is just a perception that we should not be involved," said Keith Hampton, associate professor of communications at Rutgers University. "We fear having people intrude in our lives, but we also have to recognize ... (the) risk in not knowing the people around you."

Knowing your neighbors can help defuse conflicts before they turn ugly.

"If someone leaves their dog out too late barking, then that's Joe — it's not some random guy you hate," said Bob Borzotta, founder of neighborsfromhell.com, a chat room for people embroiled in neighbor disputes.

Though technology is partly responsible for making neighbors less relevant (it enables people get social support from afar), it also is helping revive neighbor ties. Several social networking sites are dedicated to connecting neighbors; Hampton's research shows that people who use those technologies are more likely to talk to their neighbors in person and on the phone than those who don't.

One such site is Nextdoor.com, which has more than 1,900 neighborhoods, said cofounder Nirav Tolia. Its purpose is not social but to solve practical problems, like finding a lost dog or organizing a block party. The majority of posts are either recommendation requests (someone seeking a good plumber) or classifieds (trying to sell a couch). There's also an "urgent alerts" feature that sends an emergency note via text message; a neighborhood in Texas used it recently to alert people to tornadoes.

Jon Elliott, 28, joined the Nextdoor group for his neighborhood in Lancaster, Pa., in hopes of creating a sense of community because, he > said, "it's hard to go up to someone walking their dog and just start a conversation."

The site proved helpful when a posting about a car break-in spurred a slew of neighbors to respond that their cars also had been broken into, Elliott, said. But neighbors also now wave to each other in the street and call one another by their names, he added.

That's not to say neighbors should become best friends. It's the weak ties that make a happy neighborhood, Hampton said, so just make it a point to say hello or offer to collect someone's newspapers if they're going out of town.

Respecting boundaries is vital, Borzotta added. Introducing yourself if you're new to the neighborhood, or welcoming a neighbor who has just moved in, is a good way to establish contact, he said.

So, how well do you know your neighbors? Turn to page 5 and take the VOLC Know Thy Neighbor Quiz. You may learn a few new and rather interesting facts about the people who live here. And, you may just have something more to talk about at the next social gathering!

Committees Formed

Recently, VOLC residents have organized committees to facilitate activities and maintain the use of the clubhouse. While these groups are very much in their infancy, meetings have been taking place, and as more items are accomplished, they will be reported to the entire community through email and/or this newsletter. To date, the following groups have been formed:

- Clubhouse Rental Agreement Committee. Spearheaded by Jim Davis, this committee is responsible for researching the rental agreements used by other similar communities, making recommendations to Benchmark, and further collaborate with Benchmark in the preparation of a rental agreement for residents wishing to use the clubhouse for private events. Others on this committee include Patti Abernethy, Kitty Heston, Donnie Thompson, Joe Strasser, Don Doto, and Bob Dickol.
- Social Activities Committee. This group will organize and maintain a calendar of events and social activities for VOLC residents, including monthly Happy Hours. To provide input or to request a special activity, contact anyone on the committee: Maria Tricarico, Carol Thompson, Kathy Karthauser and Christine Killian. Activity calendars will be emailed to residents monthly and will be posted on the clubhouse bulletin board.
- Benchmark Liaison Committee. Sam Ferrara and Paul Wellborn have agreed to serve as liaisons with Benchmark to communicate maintenance issues regarding the clubhouse or to address other concerns impacting the community.
- Supplies "Captain". This is a committee of one!
 Carol Thompson has agreed to monitor the use of supplies in the clubhouse (paper products, utensils, coffee, etc.) and to replenish items when the supply runs low.

Neighbors Helping Neighbors

One of the greatest benefits of living in VOLC is having neighbors who care. We are blessed with amazing residents who are ready and eager to lend a helping hand. Whether you need a ride to the doctor, a few items from the store, a prescription from the pharmacy, all you need to do is call one of the people listed to the right. Neighbors will also pick up your mail, the newspaper, and even water your plants when you are away from home. Many residents call on neighbors when ill or recovering from surgery, especially helpful when loved ones live a distance away. For more information, contact Barb Carter, 836-3023.

Beware the Cold Weather!

The cold temperatures and slippery conditions that accompany our Delaware winters can create many dangers for older adults. Taking precautions to stay safe in cold weather can help prevent weather-related accidents and health problems. Some things to think about:

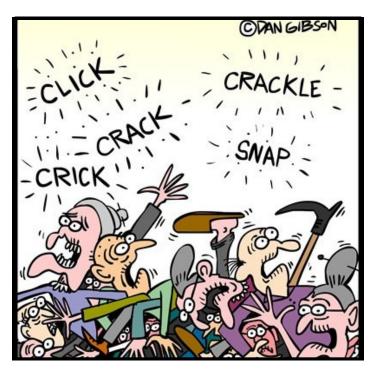

- Many people turn down their thermostats in the winter to save money. The National Institute on Aging recommends setting thermostats no lower than 68 degrees to prevent hypothermia. You can save money on heating by closing off unused rooms (shut the heating vents and close the doors), keeping blinds and curtains closed, caulking window and door gaps, and installing storm windows and insulating film.
- House fires are also a concern in winter months. Carefully follow the safety manual for any portable heater. Make sure the heater has an automatic shutoff feature in case it tips over, and never leave it unattended. Make sure your fireplace has a screen to catch sparks, and have the flue checked annually. Use power strips instead of extension cords and turn them off when not in use. Install smoke and carbon monoxide detectors on every level of your home.
- Older adults are also at risk for dehydration in winter because the air is drier, and aging diminishes one's sense of thirst. Follow your doctor's recommendations for fluid intake.

◆ The likelihood of catching a cold or flu is greater during the winter. Keep healthy by washing your hands often. Flu shots are available at most large pharmacies, often provided at no cost to Medicare subscribers; check with your doctor or pharmacy.

And, lastly, seasonal depression is common at this time of year. It can be caused by decreased sunlight, increased isolation and holiday melancholy. If depression is suspected, contact the Delaware Mental Health Association at 754-7933, or go to www.mhainde.org. The MHA offers support, education, and advocacy for those dealing with depression or anxiety disorders.
